He can do the things that you want done in the way that you would do them yourself, without litigation fears. Your estate may be saved thousands of dollars because your executor can be given time through your will to use his best judgment and consult with other people, and thus avoid liquidating your assets hurriedly or during a time of depression.

Wills Permit Special Provisions

Only through a will can you arrange to leave money in trust so that the bereaved can have the full income for life and then have the principal go to the children or other chosen people. You can, if you wish, distribute your property in unequal amounts among heirs where the need of some may be greater than that of others. It should be clearly recognized, too, that it could take two years or more for a court-appointed executor to settle your affairs, and your heirs might have little or nothing to live on during this period. An executor can be authorized in your will to disburse a certain amount each month to your wife for instance, pending final settlement. This can be increased if there is illness or unexpected trouble. Changes in your will can be made by you at any time by adding proper codicils which your lawyer will advise you on.

Most people have favorite churches and charities that they intend to remember, but these organizations will receive nothing unless there is a will. Every man and woman should leave something to his or her church, especially since religion is still the only hope for our unsettled and disturbed world. Practically everything of value that we have — democracy, schools, hospitals, personal freedom — we owe to the work of the church. So don't forget your church in your will.

Reputable Lawyer Important

I urge you not to try to make your own will to save a few dollars. Find a reputable lawyer, give him a complete list of the gifts you want to make, and designate whom you want for an executor. Any good lawyer (he should be a resident of your state) will be able to put your wishes into clear legal shape. He will tell you to have the will signed by three witnesses who watch you affix your signature; preferably witnesses should not include those mentioned in the document. He will explain any technicalities to you, particularly as to the laws in your state.

It is a good idea to have at least three carbon copies of your will so that your suggested executor can familiarize himself with your intentions. One can be put in your safe-deposit box for your own personal reference, and one can remain with your lawyer. The original should be left with your bank and a receipt therefor obtained. Even if you have not very much money at this time, you should make a will. It will turn out to be a fine investment for you.

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

Son Of God

Lesson for October 21, 1962

What is there in the Christian religion that marks it as different from any other in the world? We have something or other in common with every religion, to be sure. It has been said that Christian religion and the most barbarous of jungle faiths have more in common than either of these has with atheism. But that is not the point. What do we have that is distinctive, unique, unlike any other religion whatsoever?

The answer will think of the answer at once: Jesus Christ. There is no equivalent of Jesus in any other religion. Alleged "opposite numbers" turn out, on inspection, to bear little resemblance to the Christian Lord.

Because of the great importance Jesus Christ possesses, the church has thought much and long about Him, and has said a great deal. It all grows out of what was said in the Bible about Him. Out of the Bible, that could be said, three points are selected here, for highlighting—all from the Bible material.

Equality With God

First of all, the church teaches that Jesus Christ is divine. The most usual way to say this in the New Testament is to call Jesus the "Son of God." Now there are three kinds of "sons" of God recognized in the Bible. To repeat what was said in this column last week, at lowest level are all men, all human beings. By creation we are all children of God. But there is a great difference between being a son-by-creation and a son-by-faith-and-love. So the second level is the sonship of adoption, as Paul puts it in Romans 8. One instance trusting conscious sonship of true Christians. The third level has only one person in it. Christ Jesus our Lord, the Son of God. The writers of the New Testament never (or very seldom indeed) call Jesus God directly; but the church reflecting through many years on what the Bible does say, long ago arrived at the conclusion that whatever it takes to make God God, Jesus Christ has and is. Yet Christ and the Father are not two Gods. The church came near saying that, but after a long debate concluded there cannot be two Gods. Jesus is not a son of God, not a substitute or minor God. That is the meaning we see in Paul's saying that Christ was in the form of God, but did not think equality with God was a thing to be grasped.

"He Emptied Himself"

Paul goes right on to say that Christ "emptied Himself" and was born in the likeness of men. The writer to the Hebrews goes farther than saying Jesus was "like" men. Christ, he says (Hebrews 2:14) "partook of the same nature" as his human brothers.

In other words, the church declares that not only as divine as the Father in heaven is, He is as human as you and I are. This was not a make-believe, not putting on a costume and pretending to be a man. It was really being a man. The church has never explained how this could be. If we knew how it could be, we would know as much as God knows.

Giver of Life

There are many figures of speech in the Bible to indicate one thing; that Christ is the source of spiritual life for all who believe in Him. Jesus called Himself the vine, with His disciples as the branches. He called Himself bread and water. (Note: He did not say cake; bread and water were then the minimum essentials for food and drink; Christ is not to be regarded as a luxury but as a necessity.) Those who believe in Him have eternal life, now. Eternal life (and this is a noteworthy point) is not merely a longer life. It means (as Saint John uses the words, and Jesus before him) a different quality of life. Mere everlastingness might not be such a good thing. Eternal life is the kind of life which deserves to be everlasting. What Christians are saying, to put a big idea into very small space, is that what Christ came to do was to bring to this earth, to any one who desires it, a new kind of life, so that we may become new persons.

W. D. Workman

Textbook For Americans

"The danger which world Communism presents to the free nations has not abated, if anything, it has increased."

So says FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover in his new book, "A Study of Communism," which is being published today by Holt, Rinehart, and Winston.

HAVING MADE that declaration in his foreword, Director Hoover proceeds to document his charge in 200 pages of clearly-written and logically-presented facts. This "Study of Communism" is not any hysterical collection of accusations. It is a reasoned statement of the history, growth and significance of international Communism.

The concluding section of the book is turned over to an itemized listing of the basic contrasts between "Communism" and "freedom," as Hoover prefers to distinguish the two. Here are three brief examples of the contrasts he cites:

Under "Economy"— Communism: "The economy is totally planned, directed, and controlled by the state." Freedom: "Our free-enterprise economy is based on competition."

Under "elections"— Communism: "The outcome of an election is predetermined since only the Communist party candidates appear on the ballot." Freedom: "There is no predetermined outcome to an election, for the result rests on the free choice made by the voters."

Under "Employment"— Communism: "The worker is restricted to his work by various governmental regulations, among which are the labor book and the internal passport." Freedom: "The worker is free to choose his own occupation."

BUT THERE IS a deeper contrast to the book—an exposition of basic Communist concepts.

Herein lies one of its major contributions to an understanding of Communism. The would-be student who goes to primary sources generally finds complete frustration and bewilderment in seeking to wade through the word-jungle of Communist semantics.

Marx, Engels, Lenin, Stalin, Khrushchev and Mao Tse-tung—and all the other patron saints of Communism—write in terms which are almost incomprehensible to the average American. All the way from Marx's "dictatorship of the proletariat" to Khrushchev's "peaceful coexistence," Communist literature is filled with verbiage which conceals more than it discloses.

DIRECTOR HOOVER, however, has cut through that underbrush, and cleared a path which can be followed by anyone who is prepared to move slowly along the way. Hoover's chapter on "Basic Communist Concepts" is itself a bit difficult in spots, but it is so much clearer than anything else available that it stands out in what could be called elative simplicity.

Hoover also performs a most useful service by puncturing the numerous myths built up about Communism. He peels away the veneer with which Communists have sought to cover their false predictions and physical errors.

Americans will find especial interest and concern, in those chapters devoted to Communism in the United States—the nation which the Communists have branded as "the main economic, financial and military force of modern imperialism."

Quoting from the Communists' own words in their new "manifesto" of December 1960, Hoover warns that a stepped-up offensive is under way throughout the world to spread Communist influence.

HERE, FOR EXAMPLE, are excerpts from the "new Communist manifesto quoted by Hoover:

"It is of the utmost importance that Communists should extend their work in trade unions and cooperatives, among the peasantry, the youth, the women, in sports organizations, and the unorganized sections of the population . . . There are opportunities now to draw the younger generation into the struggle for peace and democracy, and for the great ideals of Communism."

The Hoover book contains ample evidence, in the Communists' own words, of their unrelenting determination to dominate the world. And there are numerous, although necessarily brief, illustrations of how the Communists have taken over country after country.

THE REAL MESSAGE of the study, however, is Hoover's own plea that Americans hold firm to their spiritual values, their dedication to freedom, and their determination to resist Communism. He holds out no hopes for a quick and simple victory over the international Communist conspiracy. But neither does he show any signs of discouragement:

"Wherever the people are really informed, there is . . . fundamental strength. In a democratic society, it is the duty of the government to keep the people informed. It is equally the duty of each citizen to insure that he is informed."

J. Edgar Hoover, in his new "Study of Communism" and his older "Masters of Deceit," simplifies the task of being informed.

Area Landowners Plant 9,305,700 Tree Seedlings

Although the weather until recently has been on the cool side, it is doubtful if many landowners have given much thought to their fall tree planting program. However, it is time to do so. The State owned tree seedling nurseries have worked all summer on the new crop and they will soon complete their growth for this year.

The Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service has already announced the early sign up period in some counties, and landowners interested in planting and other forestry work should make plans now.

The Farmville office of the Division of Forestry is pleased to announce that landowners in the 10 surrounding counties planted a total of 9,305,700 seedlings last year. A breakdown by county is as follows:

Amelia 297,000; Appomattox 1,040,700; Buckingham 2,417,200; Charlotte 1,393,100; Cumberland 285,500; Halifax 662,500; Lunenburg 943,800; Mecklenburg 711,300; Nottoway 877,600 and Prince Edward 477,600.
